

General Plan of the BATTLE OF BALACLAVA

Advance of the Russian Cavalry.

EXPLANATION OF SIGNS.

The site of the English Light Cavalry Camp, thus

The site of the English Heavy Cavalry Camp, thus

N. B. Orders had been given to strike these Camps in the early morning, but at the time here indicated, i.e. about 10 a.m. considerable traces of them remained.

At the time here indicated the Russians had captured the Redoubts 1, 2, 3 & 4 and established themselves in the three first, leaving the N^o 4 Redoubt unoccupied. Jabrokovitsky with between 7 & 8 Battalions, 4 Squadrons and 14 Guns is represented as established on the Fedioukine Hills, but he had barely taken up his position at the time here indicated.

The four Squadrons despatched against Sir Colin Campbell are in the midst of their encounter with the 93rd Highlanders, whilst the Turkish Troops are retreating in confusion upon Balaklava.

Under the command of General Izyeff, the main body of the Russian Cavalry having already advanced some way up the Valley is inclining to its left and passing over the Causeway Height towards the site of the Light Cavalry Camp.

Scarlett with six Squadrons of Heavy Dragoons is marching upon the ground in front of Kadikoi, and is already close to the ground towards which the Russian Cavalry is advancing. His order of march is shown in the text.

Between the Redoubts 5 and 6, and nearly upon the spot occupied in the Map by the letter H, there was a plantation which has not been indicated in the official surveys.

The positions of General Canrobert, and of Lord Raglan were upon the crest in front of the French Corps of observation.

