

Figure 8.4. Relative stable carbon isotope compositions of individual amino acids in bacteria cultured on alanine and glutamic acid (from Macko et al. 1987). Amino acids provide a good example of the wide range in $\delta^{13}\text{C}$ values that can exist within a compound class, largely owing to the many different biochemical pathways by which various amino acids are formed.

