

The first printing of Language Aptitude Theory and Practice, 9781316513996, included an endorsement that was meant for a different Cambridge book and was incorrectly attributed to Professor Peter Robinson. Cambridge University Press & Assessment apologises unreservedly for this error, which will be corrected for all subsequent printings.

The correct text of Professor Robinson's endorsement for Language Aptitude Theory and Practice is as follows:

‘Theoretically motivated research into aptitude for second language acquisition (SLA) under different conditions of exposure, and at different stages of development and levels of proficiency, is essential for aptitude test development, and for matching learners to optimal conditions of instruction. This book provides the most thorough, up-to-date summaries of these important cognitive, developmental, and educational issues available and is essential reading for all language educators and SLA researchers! Most highly recommended!’

Peter Robinson, Professor of Second Language Acquisition, Aoyama Gakuin University